

Impact of energy price development on chemical industry

Souček I.¹, Suchý J.²

¹*UCT, Prague, Czech Republic*

²*SCHP ČR, Prague, Czech Republic*

The chemical industry belong to the energy intensive sectors.

The current development of energy price (natural gas and electricity), emission allowances and basic raw material: crude is commented.

Specific impact of energy price development is analysed on selected typical chemical production.

The break-even price of emission allowances is identified for industrial operators.

Additionally the alternative energy production prospective compared to fossil sources is discussed.